Lessons Worth Behaving For

How to plan and deliver outstanding active lessons that motivate and engage all learners – and silence the elephants in the room

You can try and make children behave or you can plan wonderfully creative, effective lessons in which children simply learn – despite themselves. This is the secret behind Hywel's award-winning Oops! book and one that he shares with teachers of all phases and backgrounds in this highly motivating, challenging and practical day-course – all delivered in Hywel's inimitable style. How do you make the everyday special? How do you find the curriculum wherever you look? How do you hook children into learning from the off? And how do you make your classroom a magical space where learning happens – as if by magic?

Audience: Teachers and curriculum leaders. Suitable for key stages 1, 2 and 3

Hywel Roberts is a teacher, author and educator working across the UK and beyond. He contributes to various university programmes, is Associate Director for Independent Thinking and an associate consultant for the University of Wolverhampton. A true Northerner once described as 'a world leader in enthusiasm', Hywel deals in curriculum liberation, creative practice, learner engagement and helping teachers understand their overriding moral purpose. His award-winning first book Oops! Helping children learn accidentally was published by the Independent Thinking Press.
