How To Engage The Un-Engaged Make Learning Real

Inspirational teaching is essential if we are to encourage all learners to fly. If our children don't love to learn, how difficult is it to teach them?

For some of our most disengaged learners, learning only happens when it is relevant, personal and real. This is the complete teacher's guide to genuine teaching and learning. Sometimes, the biggest block to achievement isn't the child's ability but a curriculum that is irrelevant, delivered in a way that does not engage. Which means there is so much we can do to bring the best out of all learners, every lesson once we choose to make the learning experience as genuine as possible.

This interactive and inspiring day-course will not only share many practical and proven strategies to use in the classroom to engage all learners, but also show how an ethos of genuine learning – learning you can see, hear, touch, taste and feel – can transform an entire school.

Audience: For all those passionate about learning. School leaders and classroom practitioners, SEND, G&T. Suitable for EYFS, key stage 1, 2 and 3

'If they can't touch it, taste it, see it and feel it, then don't do it!' This was Simon's mantra when leading a challenging estate school – one that helped transform that school and the life chances of the children who attended it. In demand now internationally as a challenging and effective leadership coach and classroom-based consultant, Simon is one of Independent Thinking's most popular Associates.
