Genuine School Leadership

How to be a genuinely outstanding school leader by first of all learning to lead yourself

Rather than being a course about how to lead others, this is a course about how to lead yourself – and then it is about how to lead others. An intensive day focusing on your own development, this course will help you identify what genuine leadership entails as well as develop your capacity for leadership and identify the skills you need to be a genuine school leader. Divided into three sections, you will learn the difference between leading and managing, how to assess the impact of your leadership style and how to make change happen – both personally and across your school.

Audience: Middle leaders and those aspiring to middle leadership, primary and secondary teachers. Suitable for key stages 1, 2, 3 and 4

Simon Cooper-Hind is a controversial and effective former head teacher who now works extensively across the UK and internationally sharing his passion for ensuring schools offer the very best in school leadership, teaching and learning. An Associate Head for the National College, as well as a sought-after speaker, trainer and coach and long-time Associate of Independent Thinking, Simon pulls no punches when it comes to challenging all schools to get things right for all learners.
