Making Learning Exciting

How can schools help pupils take responsibility for their own learning?

This day-course will introduce teachers and school leaders to a new 3Rs – letting children take a greater responsibility for shaping their own learning, respecting the views, ideas and ideals of others and studying real themes where they can make a genuine difference (rather than just recycling the tired old ones).

To discover who will save the world from global warming, civil conflict and what happens when the oil runs out, look no further than your classroom. But we must play our part – providing all children with rich and relevant learning experiences.
