How to Teach Without Losing Your Soul

How to ensure you're the teacher you always wanted to be – and stay that way - despite everything

It can be difficult to stay true to the teacher you once wanted to be. You went into the profession to excite and inspire yet, in today's system, children's emotions and feelings are practically irrelevant. But you can teach in ways that are emotionally engaging and produce results and you can be playful and rigorous in your approach. In this powerful and reinvigorating day, two leading figures in the educational

'Resistance' will show you how to reclaim the classroom, bring learning back to life and create the space for you to be the teacher you imagined you always would be.

Audience: Classroom teachers plus middle and curriculum leaders responsible for CPD in their setting, resistance fighters, classroom reclaimers, mojo seekers. Suitable for keystages 1, 2, 3 and 4

Hywel Roberts is a teacher, author and educator working with schools and universities across the UK and beyond. A true Northerner once described as 'a world leader in enthusiasm', Hywel deals in curriculum liberation, creative practice, learner engagement and helping teachers understand their overriding moral purpose.

Dr Debra Kidd has worked in schools teaching children from the ages of 3 to post-graduate level for over 20 years and is the author of Teaching: Notes from the Frontline and The Matter of Mattering: Edgework in Education. She believes that any form of learning can be made to matter to children and that by mattering, it becomes memorable.
